

Why ThrowThemAllOutAmerica.com does not allow reference to individuals or party affiliations.

Please note that you will not find any reference to any individual congressional member or party affiliation on the ThrowThemAllOutAmerica.com website or blog with the exception of my “Personal Apology” letter in which a brief historical background is given that references one individual Congressman (now retired) by name and does make mention of Democrats and Republicans. If you have taken the time to read the entire grassroots PLAN on the website you will understand why. Seventy-four percent of voters agree that Congress as an institution and culture has become completely dysfunctional. The primary focus of the ThrowThemAllOutAmerica.com website is to organize and educate people of all political world views who already agree that Congress is broken into taking principled action to restore and renew this venerable institution. Partisan bickering, finger pointing and blame-gaming of any individual or political party only serves to divert attention from that goal. There are multitudes of websites and blogs that serve no other purpose than to encourage partisans from all political persuasions to blast away at their political enemies and allow political emotions to run rampant without result. Those who want to engage in those kinds of activities can find plenty of other places to go. I want those who come to the ThrowThemAllOutAmerica.com website to be able to engage one another as Americans with the shared interest of doing something positive for themselves their families and their country.
